

5E Sin Chun Hong (29)

Sharing on 18 October 2007

Recently, I read a newspaper with this heading, ' An old man hadn't had food for one month.' It was about an elderly man who was too poor to afford his basic living and was caught of robbing food in a shop. This old man was called Mr. Tsang. The story was that he failed to receive money from the social assistance, so he went to a 7-11 store to threaten the shop-keeper there with a knife for the hope that he would be sent to prison and be given free meals there. Finally, the court understood the case and Mr. Tsang was sent to an elderly home on mercy instead of the prison.

I felt sad from this piece of news. I have the following feelings after reading: are we concerned enough about the old? What can we do now to help those poor old folks for their rest of lives? On the other hand, I wonder why some people in their old age as Mr. Tsang live such a poor life? Have they done anything wrong in their younger days? What should we do now in order not to make that happen to us when we get old? I'm hoping to have your answers.