A few days ago, a young teacher Leung Hing Yuk killed himself after breaking up with his girlfriend. As his friend mentioned, every time he separated with his loved one, he thought of committing suicide. This time, he was drunk and impulsively put an end to his life.

Romantic relationship might be very important to some of you here, but does it mean your whole life? Surely not. You still have your friends, your family and your future. There are many other factors we have to consider once we are making decisions since some people concerned with us may greatly be affected.

As a teacher in school, he instilled positive moral value and knowledge to his students. As a son in his family, he took good care of his 70-year-old mother. However, what he did has posed a prolonged psychological impact on them. Simply to say, they feel very depressed because of his death.

Have you ever lost your love ones, such as your family members and friends? What is your feeling at that time? Remember it, that would be the same feeling for your beloved ones when your were gone. Try to find some help whenever you come across adversities instead of just sticking on the unsolved problem. Treasure your life and you could have a brighter future.
