I would like to talk about traps we may encounter when applying for jobs. We may see many attractive job advertisements when we are looking for jobs. We should not have unrealistic expectation. Advertisements telling you that you can earn thousands of dollars for doing too easy jobs and very low expectations for qualifications will be listed.

The offer is suspicious. If such jobs were genuine, everyone would be competing for them, and they would not have to be frequently advertised.

These jobs usually involve selling something, but most of the goods they provided are poor in quality. The company hopes that you will be able to persuade friends or relatives to invest money in the business. If you are successful, they get more profits than you do. If you are not, they will assure that the loss is not theirs.

You have to work hard if you want to earn money. Don't look for short-cuts.
