

Acid Attacks

Good morning Principal, Vice-Principals, teachers and my fellow schoolmates,

As you all know, we have had around ten acid attacks in the recent months. These incidents were no doubt tragedies. In order to guarantee pedestrians' safety, it was therefore suggested that security cameras should be installed all over the district, so that similar incidents in future could be prevented. However, this suggestion has aroused public concern and stirred up a heated debate among the residents.

As it would be much easier for the police to find out the culprits, some people are convinced that installing such cameras would be an effective and promising method to protect citizens. Nevertheless, some critics who object to this precaution are concerned about the privacy of residents. They are afraid of their whereabouts being traced.

In any emergency, I strongly think that security is more important than freedom. If we don't do anything, acid attacks will happen again. Then everyone will panic when walking on the streets. To prevent such incidents or even more disastrous ones from happening, I believe that it is necessary for us to give up some of our privacy, to put our trust in the police and government, in exchange for a safe society. This is the end of my presentation. Thank you.
